Passive vs Active overview in Dec 2019

December in brief

- For a year that was otherwise weighed down by negative sentiment, 2019 ends with a spectacular flourish, long-term funds posting net inflows of €56bn in December.
- Risk appetite is on the risen thus draining the appeal of Money Market funds, which see withdrawals of €11bn.
- Passive funds retain the high ground, but in this final month of the year their net inflows account for just 53% of the long-term total.
- Bonds may have been the dominant asset class in 2019, but the category gave way to equities in November and this trend follows through in December.
- Global equity funds win the largest volume of new money (€7bn), and active funds are the dominant driver.
- BlackRock is the month's top-selling group, and also reigns supreme for the year. Of the active fund groups, PIMCO is the 2019 winner with net inflows of €40bn.
- An institutional US equity tracker fund from Pictet scores the largest inflows of the final month of the year at €2.2bn, beating even the Swedish AP default pension funds.

Bright new year beckons

Sales trends in the fund industry seldom follow calendar deadlines and 2019 was no different. The year began in desultory fashion as investors took stock of global economic weakness. The negative sentiment that sucked the energy out of fund sales at the end of 2018 weighed on savers as the year turned, and it continued until Central Banks stepped in with further market support. With this prop, new money began to flow back into funds and 2019 ended on a high point never before seen in December, a month that is normally dragged back by bed and breakfast practices. This gives good cause for optimism for the early months of 2020.

The base drivers are all in place; Central Bank support, Brexit and US/China trade talks on the back burner and recognition by investors that they missed a year of extraordinary market performance in 2019, exemplified by a 25% return on the MSCI World Index. Although fixed income funds garnered the largest inflows (€274bn), it was equity funds that delivered the strongest asset growth (€870bn) and this, despite ending the year with cumulative redemptions of nearly €30bn. It is quite likely that retail investors will once again arrive late to the party, but their arrival should brighten up the year for many fund managers.

Looking ahead

Denting the general mood of bonhomie in January was the spread of coronavirus and its potential to damage stock market performance, at least in the short term. Indeed, markets ended the month in a bit of a funk, most major indices dipping into the red. But this is the Chinese year of the metal rat – a year that is characterised by innovation, driven energy and success, albeit with some upheavals along the way. 2019 left many investors wishing they had been a bit more adventurous with their savings and this pent-up energy could help push net inflows ahead of last year's volumes.
